The Egyptian Museum is known as one of the oldest and most famed archaeological museums in the Middle East. It has the largest collection of ancient Egyptian artifacts anywhere else in the world. Meanwhile, this museum has given an insightful view of the great influence that Egypt had, stretching from the prehistoric age to Greco-Roman times.

It is in the National Museum of Egyptian Civilization, one of the greatest mentioned in visiting the old and distinguished museum, where visitors can explore diverse soils of Egypt in her rich and captivating history. It is also commonsensically among the most outstanding museum facilities in the Middle East.

The Abdeen Museum is a historic museum that has become very culturally valuable and must be seen by both residents and visitors in Abdeen Bey.

The palace takes its name from one of Muhammad Ali Pasha's military generals. He had a small palace on this site, and later his widow sold it to Ismail, whereupon Ismail demolished the original palace, increased the ground, and built the magnificent palace that one sees today.
